The University of Miami

Interdisciplinary Studies | Donette Francis, Director
American Studies

The Program in American Studies at the University of Miami fosters the interdisciplinary study of American culture and society, and explores the place of the United States in an increasingly interconnected world. Our faculty come from a wide range of fields, including history, literature, religion, art, philosophy, law, music, ethnic studies, architecture, sociology, communications, and education. What unites them is the commitment to examining the U.S. from multiple perspectives, highlighting the diversity of people, cultures, and experiences that have shaped the past and present United States. The Program places analysis of globalization at its center, and offers a hemispheric perspective that allows students and faculty to explore interests in the United States, the Caribbean, Latin America, the Pacific Rim, and other border crossings.

The undergraduate curriculum in American Studies encourages students to bridge the divide between disciplines by examining specific themes and topics in an engaging, dynamic, interdisciplinary manner. By exposing students to courses that place questions of cultural diversity, regional difference, ethnic and racial identity, gender and sexuality, class dynamics, and popular culture at the forefront of intellectual investigation, the Program in American Studies enables them to situate their own experiences in a wider context. It also exposes them to a multiplicity of perspectives that inform our understanding of the United States and its place in a global society. The Program strongly encourages its majors to study abroad, and faculty members help students plan their curriculum to make that option feasible.

MAJOR in American Studies (30 credits)

1. Introduction to American Studies (AMS 101). Specific topics for this course change every semester; its purpose is to acquaint beginning students with the approaches and areas of inquiry common to the field.
2. AMS 310: The United States in the World.
3. At least two courses in American Studies at the 300 level or above.
4. At least one course in American history and at least one course in American literature.
5. Three courses, chosen in consultation with an American Studies advisor, in a specialized area of American Studies (200 level or higher). Students may work in areas including, but not limited to, ethnic studies, Caribbean Studies, Latino/a Studies, environmental studies, communication studies, women's literature, urban studies, African American studies, religious studies and material culture studies.

6. Students must take courses from at least three different departments in order to fulfill the requirements for the major.

7. AMS 501: Senior Project. In addition, all majors must complete AMS 501: Senior Project. This capstone course can take the form of an individual research project or an internship at a local cultural or civic institution. For the research option, students will identify an appropriate faculty member to supervise and grade the project, and then obtain approval from the program director before proceeding with the project. The student must produce a substantial written report or research paper, the format of which will be determined by the faculty member and student in consultation with the program director. For the internship option, students will partner with any number of local institutions and produce a creative and/or scholarly project for evaluation. The internship will be arranged through the program director. The final product will be evaluated by the supervising faculty member and the program director.

American Studies majors with a cumulative GPA of at least 3.5 in AMS courses and an overall GPA of at least 3.0 may earn departmental honors by completing AMS 505: Honors Thesis. Candidates for departmental honors are responsible for finding a faculty member to serve as thesis advisor. Students then must complete a thesis proposal of approximately 500 words that must be approved by the thesis advisor and the program director. The format and length of the thesis will vary according to the nature of the project. Students typically would take AMS 501 in the fall semester of the senior year and AMS 505 in the spring to complete the honors thesis.

MINOR in American Studies (15 credits)

1. Introduction to American Studies (AMS 101).
2. AMS 310: The United States in the World
3. At least one course in American history or American literature.
4. Two other courses, including at least one AMS course at the 300 level or above.

For an advising appointment, please contact the Program Director.

This course will introduce students to some of the most pressing issues examined by American Studies scholars today by exploring the genealogy of several different keywords. Terms such as gender, globalization, technology, and work carry a cluster of embedded values that shape our apprehension of the social world around us. We will devote roughly two weeks to a single concept and any other terms closely associated with it. To understand how these words work, we will discuss journalistic essays, academic articles, fictional works, films, and TV serials that engage them. As we explore these concepts, we will address a number of questions. Why, for example, do some words—such as freedom—wield so much political power and yet often seem so vaguely defined? How do certain words invite us to revise our understanding of U.S. culture while others limit our capacity to manage certain social and economic problems? How stable are the meanings behind these words? How easily can these concepts be manipulated? Readings may include work by contemporary fiction writers such as Jonathan Franzen or Toni Morrison; essays by commentators such as David Brooks and Naomi Klein; studies by scholars such as Judith Halberstam and Siva Vaidhyanathan; films such as Children of Men and Urbanized; and TV serials such as Homeland and The Sopranos. Students will also have the opportunity to work with a number of electronic tools that enable them to track word frequency and meaning variation over time.

Requirements: This course will largely be discussion driven, so attendance and participation are mandatory. Students will write two short papers and complete a final project. For their final project, each student will select a keyword of their own choosing not covered by the class and outline its genealogy and importance in U.S. culture.
AMS 301 1U— Topics in American Studies: History — Henry Green
Course Title: The American Jewish Experience: Hollywood and Popular Culture
Tu 6:25pm-9:05pm

Hollywood and Popular Culture is a course that uses the lens of films to interpret the American Jewish experience. Cinema began at the same time that the waves of Jews from Eastern Europe migrated to the USA (c. 1900). What has the Jewish presence brought to Hollywood and American popular culture and how has Hollywood shaped the Jewish American experience? A selection of genres (dramas, comedies, epics, and biographies) will be examined. Emphasis will be placed on how the experiences and attitudes of Americans, in general, and American Jewry, in particular, have been reflected on the screen from the early 20th century until the present. The course will situate the films within the context of Hollywood culture—a complex industry in which ownership, production, distribution, exhibition, marketing and sales are closely intertwined. The tensions between maintaining an ethnic identity and assimilating, affirming cultural pluralism and “melting”, and continuing religious traditions in the face of modernity are core features of the course.

AMS 301 K— Topics in American Studies— Aldo Regalado
Course Title: Comics in America
MW 6:45pm-7:40pm

This course invites students to explore, examine and otherwise engage the historical development, cultural significance, aesthetic characteristics and cognitive dimensions of sequential art in the United States. The course aims to understand comic strips, comic books and their nineteenth-century precursors as extensions of American print culture more broadly, with emphasis placed on how they engaged (and continue to engage) American notions of race, class, gender and nationalism in the context of an emergent modernity.

Texts may include:
• Understanding Comics by Scott McCloud
• Watchmen by David Gibbons and Alan Moore
• Jimmy Corrigan: The Smartest Kid on Earth by Chris Ware
• A Boondocks anthology by Aaron McGruder
• Journalism by Joe Sacco
• The Power of Comics by Randy Duncan

Course Title: Contemporary World Literature
TuTh 11:00am-12:15pm

In this class, we will read novels by contemporary writers whose roots lie in former British colonies in South Asia, Africa, and the Caribbean but for whom the United States is a significant focus in their writing, whether it is imagined as a new imperial power in the era of globalization, as a beacon for migrants seeking new opportunities, or often as both at the same time. In its first forty years, from the mid-1950s onward, postcolonial literature in English dramatized, resisted, and wrestled with the history of the British Empire that had oppressed millions of people, often brutally, but had also helped to create a generation of writers who used the language of the colonizers to eloquently oppose the Empire and its legacy in the postcolonial period. In the last twenty years, however, “postcolonial” literature has increasingly turned its attention away from Britain and toward the United States, which is often now where these writers are located. We will read and analyze some of the most significant novels that exemplify, and record, this cultural and historical transformation.

AMS 322 B — Topics in American Studies: Literature — John Funchion
Course Title: Edgar Allen Poe’s America
MWF 9:05am-9:55am

Edgar Allan Poe has remained a fixture of popular American culture since the nineteenth century. The circulation of his stories coincided with the rise of a new form of mass media: the periodical. Fittingly, Poe continues to surface in the mass media of our own age, as evinced by The Simpson’s popular rendition of “The Raven” and James McTeigue’s movie The Raven. Yet Poe’s place in American literary history is vexed. In the early twentieth century, a respected intellectual historian, V.L. Parrington, declared that “so much only need be said” about Poe because his work “lies outside the main current of American thought.” Conversely, Toni Morrison noted that “no early American writer is more important to the concept of American Africanism than Poe” because his work controversially revolves around the terror of blackness. Across the Atlantic, on the other hand, French writers and intellectuals from Baudelaire to Derrida have long displayed an infatuation with his work. This course will invite students to revisit these many readings of Poe and to explore their own interpretations. Readings will include Poe’s prose and poetry, some popular adaptations of his work, and relevant writing by his contemporaries and later authors indebted to his work. This course will help students develop their critical thinking and writing skills by requiring active participation in class discussions, several informal writing responses, two short formal papers, one long formal paper, and a final exam.

Combined with ENG 395
In 1837 Ralph Waldo Emerson exhorted his contemporaries to awaken "the sluggard intellect of this continent," and American writers responded by creating a national literature that made distinctive demands of readers. In this class, we will discuss these demands, such as attention to the natural environment, the moral implications of contemporary politics, and the kinds of lived experience that resisted rational categorization. We will read, in addition to the works listed below, short pieces by Emerson, Edgar Allan Poe, Margaret Fuller, and others. Requirements will include along with essay assignments along with a final essay examination.

Texts: James Fenimore Cooper, The Deerslayer; Nathaniel Hawthorne, The Scarlet Letter; Frederick Douglass, Narrative of the Life of Frederick Douglass, an American Slave; Herman Melville, The Piazza Tales; Harriet Beecher Stowe, Uncle Tom's Cabin; In addition, we will read essays by Emerson, excerpts from Henry David Thoreau’s Walden; short stories by Hawthorne and Edgar Allan Poe, and excerpts from Sigmund Freud’s essay The Uncanny.

AMS 324 R—Topics in American Studies: Religion—David Kling
Course title: Religion and Youth in Contemporary America
TuTh 2:00pm-3:15pm

Contrary to popular images, religion plays an important role in the lives of many teenagers and young adults in America. This course will draw from the traditional academic disciplines that have devoted attention to youth, such as education and child psychology, but will also include new scholarship on youth in the fields of sociology and history. In addition, the category of “youth” is expanded to include young adults (the traditional college age population). The general goal of the course is to examine critically the role that religion plays in the lives of youth in contemporary America.

AMS 330 S — Topics in American Studies: Sociology — Marvin Dawkins
Course title: Black Athletes in White America
TuTh 3:30pm-4:45pm

This course examines the impact of racism on sport in the United States with a specific focus on the Black athlete. Drawing upon the literature on race and sport in America, the course takes a historical view of the social context in which black athletes have competed and excelled against tremendous odds, both inside and outside of sport competition. After presenting various sociological concepts and frameworks used in analyzing sport as a microcosm of American society, generally, we use biographical evidence to examine experiences of specific Black athletes in a variety of sports from the antebellum period of slavery in America through the twenty-first century to assess the impact of racism at both individual and institutional levels. Through material presented in lectures, readings, documentary films (shown in-class) and other sources, and by engaging in discussions and individual research and writings, students will acquire an understanding of how race and racism have played a significant role in the treatment of Black athletes in American society.

AMS 350 01 — History and Culture of South Florida — Jeff Donnelly
Course title: From Swamp to Swamped: Engaging Miami, South Florida, and Florida through History and Culture
W 3:00pm-4:30pm

Using the “city as school” methodology, the course surveys library and online resources about Florida and Miami and links them with explorations of the “hands-on” learning opportunities in the Miami area. The course will serve as an introduction to Florida and the Miami metropolitan area for some and provide indigenous Miamians and Floridians with new ways to think about their home and its future. Guest speakers and field trips will ensure engagement with today’s South Florida; discussions and student blogs will provide active learning. The goal of the course is to pose significant questions about the culture, politics, and economics of contemporary Florida and to use this vibrant and unique regional history to shape and further debate about creative answers to contemporary issues. For example: does the Florida experience provide useful direction for economic revitalization in other places? What is the future of South Florida in an age of rising seas?

AMS 401 45- Seminar in American Studies – Robin Bachin
Course Title: Introduction to Urban America
W 2:00pm-4:30pm

This course will examine the rise of cities throughout American history, with an emphasis on growth and development in the 19th and 20th centuries. We will focus on the layout of cities; the role of architectural styles in shaping both national and regional identities; the rise of urban segregation; the growth of suburbs and edge cities; and the impact of urban growth on the environment. The course will address a variety of factors that have helped shape American cities, including landscape, politics, economics, class, race, gender, and leisure. Thus, we will relate discussions of the built environment with broader concerns about shaping democratic public spheres, providing adequate shelter and transportation for residents, fostering capitalist growth, and establishing a sense of place.

In addition to providing students with an introduction to American urban history, a major goal of this course is to help students understand how historical understanding can help inform present-day conditions. Students will learn how many of the urban issues we discuss from a national and historical perspective have manifested themselves locally in South Florida. Students will then have the opportunity to work collaboratively with a local community organization that addresses some aspect of planning, urban development, and local history in Miami.

Course Title: Latinos in the Media
W 5:00pm-7:40pm

This course examines the history, politics, production and reception of Latino-oriented media. It considers Latino media production processes, as well as Latino/a audiences’ immigration, incorporation and media reception patterns. The course takes advantage of Miami as a vibrant Latino/a media production site through field trips and independent research projects.

Student Learning Outcomes:
・ Understand the experience of Latina/o communities in the United States, including their diversity and differences with Anglo American and African American experiences.
・ Consider/evaluate differences between various Latina/o sub-groups and the ways in which these identities permeate media production, representation and reception.
・ Understand the historical development and current diversity of Latina/o-oriented media.
・ Conduct independent research on Latina/o media or audiences.
