Learn about what makes cities thick in the Spring 2015 semester. This seminar will introduce you to pressing issues in city policy, development and management in the current age of extended urban globalization. Why are cities increasingly challenged to find a place on the map of international competition? Do transportation systems serve the urban majority fairly? Who belongs in public space? What parts of the city feel safe and where are the ‘no-go’ zones? A global survey with a focus on the Americas and a particular concern on how the urban question plays out on the ground in Miami. Join a diverse group of students with various interests and concerns. Earn writing credit. Discover career paths in the urban field. No pre-reqs in Geography or Urban Studies.
